HAWTHORNE'S NEW BOOK-The Marble Faun-is, we are told, so far as the sale of it is concerned, what is technically called. "a great success." We rejoice at the fame of every American who devotes himself to literature, and wins a name in the republic of letters. Would that we had more of those, who instead of throwing away their genius and talents upon the ephemeral polit- did not come within the province of any of ical contentions of the times, would give their days and nights to the proper studies, which might fit them for higher and nobler pursuits-pursuits which might enable them to record their names amongst those of our countrymen who have already won a "deathless name." But, to the book-It can hardly be called a novel, for it is wanting in al- absence. most every thing that constitutes the modern novel. The tale is wild and improbable, the conclusion confused and imperfect. There are but four characters-and they are far apart from the sympathies of common life; we had almost said of human nature .--There is nothing in the plot or the personages which, would, of themselves, enlist Bayard. the interest of ordinary mortals. As a story, there is, in truth, nothing, but a disjointed, fragmentary, weird legend, violently connected with the fate and fortunes of a few characters, such as no man meets with or expects to meet with in this world. But, having said this, we are done with finding fault. As a picture of Rome, and of artist life in Italy-we know of nothing that exceeds or equals this work. And in this is its principal if not its sole merit. We wander with the author, with delight, fully sharing the presiding officer. [Mr. Fitzpatrick was his feelings, and almost seeing with his eyes, along the streets, and walls, and palaces, and churches of Rome-we linger with him around the ruins, and broken columns, and fountains of the old mistress of the world-we view with him the statues and paintings of the old masters, and the scarcely inferior productions of some of the modern artists-we go with him to St. Peters' -we tread with him the broken pavement of the Pantheon, and we linger by his side as he looks up at the frowning arches of the Coliseum. He becomes our guide and companion, and we almost regard the intrusion of the fictitious characters of his story, as we would the unsought for, and unexpected addition of a disagreeable stranger into the company of loving and intimate friends, who wished to hold sweet converse together. There are none who have a taste for the arts, who will fail to appreciate the crime. The man who was poor had comgenial criticisms, and the kindly flow of mitted a sin, and there was a screw loose, artist-love which pervade the "Marble in this country, it was the man that commit-Faun"-and but few who will not wish that, ted sin who made money. (Laughter.) All throwing off the garb of fiction, and sub. men who had either the means, the capacity duing his propensity for the "horrible" in or the determination to make a living, were story telling, Hawthorne would write a book this bill. Arrest of Mr. Sanborn. Boston, April 4 .- F. B. Sanborn was ar. rested at Concord by United States officers last night, under the requisition of the Senate Committee of Investigation. Judge Heard, of the Supreme Court issued a writ of habeas corpus, and the hearing of the case is now progressing.

The arrest of Mr. Sanborn caused much excitement at Concord. He at first refused to accompany the officers, when he was hand, cuffed and taken to the carriage struggling violently.

The town bells were rung, and a crowd speedly collected, when Sanborn was forcibly taken from the officers and kept until a writ of habeas corpus was obtained.

During the excitement, a citizen named Rufus Hemer died suddenly, as it was supposed, from fright. The hearing of Sanborn's case is before the full Bench, consisting of Judges Shaw, Metealf, Bigelow, Merrick and Hoar. The subject has been introduced in the Legislature in the form of a resolution to employ the State's Attorney for the defence.

LATER.

In the case of F. B. Sanborn, Chief Justice Shaw has decided that the Sargeant-at Arms of the United States Senate could not depute his authority to another. The decision was greeted with loud applause by the crowd assembled in the court room. Sanborn was therefore released and has returned to his home.

The BUILDINGS are all of recent constructure, are sufficient for the comfortable accommodation of two or three hundred visitors, and are located on a commanding eminence overlooking one of the most spiendid and varied landscapes to be found in the beautiful Valley of Virginia. The size, convenience, neatness, and thorough ventilation of the apartments, have especially received the commendation of visitors: in fact, all the requisites for comfortable quarters are here-each department of the hotel is furpished with suitable articles to render the whole complete, and ready for immediate occupation.

> The remarkable medicinal qualities of the water are extensively known and highly appreciated. Dr. Stewart, a distinguished chemist of Maryland, made an analysis of the wat rof these Springs, upon which he remarks, "This mineral water is well characterized as a Sulphur Spring, but unlike many sulphur waters, this is not associated with a large proportion of gypsum or suiphate of lime, and other saline matter, that disturb the bowels, load the circulation, and interfere with their con stant use as a sedative or sulphur water in many eases." Many invalids have tested the accuracy of Dr. Stewart's analysis (a copy of which will be forwarded to any person requesting it,) and have left these Springs relieved of their complaints, after having failed to secure the blessings of health from the use of other waters less healing, because less pure. Also, will be sold a large lot of HOUSE. HOLD FURNITURE, such as Tables, Chairs, Beds, Bedding, Bedsteads, &c., &c., which is all
